

A regulator can also be A facilitator

Riding out the tough challenges posed by the pandemic in the past three years, the Hong Kong aviation industry celebrated its recovery last year, gradually returning to normalcy in an orderly and safe manner.

In the face of this unprecedented global health crisis and its impacts on the aviation industry worldwide, the Civil Aviation Department remained steadfast and committed to rendering reliable, efficient and professional services. How can the department, as a regulatory authority, also be a facilitator, by implementing facilitating measures in various areas to assist industry stakeholders to cope with the challenges that may arise ahead on the path towards a full recovery of aviation sector?
