PERSPECTIVES FROM A DECADE OF SUMMITS

For developing countries, industrialisation is crucial and, to achieve it, they must undergo a process of catching up. In this context, innovation is the key to drive high productivity, which in turn creates better jobs and lays the foundation for inclusive and sustainable growth. Without international cooperation, closing this gap is extremely difficult. The Belt and Road Initiative stands out as a most relevant long-term financing and investment platform for green development, for sharing technologies, building capacities, digitalisation and connectivity.

Mrs Dilma Rousseff

President, New Development Bank (2024)

Hong Kong also has a defining role in the Belt and Road Initiative, as its primary platform. Building on its economic strengths and local talent, Hong Kong can connect the various Belt and Road partners.

Mr Péter Szijjártó

Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Hungary (2023)

The COVID-19 pandemic, geopolitical tensions, climate change, and anti-globalisation sentiment are the four major factors that I believe could affect the reshaping of the landscape of global trade policies. I strongly encourage enhanced dialogue and cooperation between all governments to find collective solutions because none of these challenges can be addressed by one government alone. Global challenges require global solutions.

Mr Xiangchen Zhang

Deputy Director-General, World Trade Organisation (2022)
